

From the office of County Judge Jody Fauley -

Projection of Rise in the San Saba River

LCRA and NWS continue to project a second rise in the San Saba River. The current model indicates the rise will not be tonight, but will be around midday tomorrow, Tuesday, July 8th, approximately 1:00 p.m.

While I, as well as all of you, am weary of any increase in the river, the prediction would be to crest around 24.3' at 7:00 p.m. tomorrow with the waters beginning to recede around 1:00 a.m. on Wednesday, July 9th. These are projection models with no guarantee of accuracy.

As stated before, the anticipation of a rise to that level would affect the shoreline areas of the river but should not threaten homes similar to Friday's flood.

Pay attention to the weather forecast. Do not be on or near the river with the expectation of the rise. Always be ready to leave if necessary to protect your family, but again, there is no expectation that this rise will result in any increased damages to San Saba County.